Supply Chain Maturity Training Workshop

Improve your supply chain management – better process, better performance
Background
When industry practitioners try to improve the performance of their supply chains, they often find how to start difficult. They are not sure which part of the supply chain operation to begin with, and how to evaluate and implement a project. One of the reasons is the confusion caused by numerous evolving supply chain management concepts and decision-making tools. Therefore, a structured approach is required to manage processes, especially as there is an increasing trend of benchmarking supply chain performance one to another, country to country. Demand is getting bigger than ever for a practical methodology of improving supply chain process for better performance.

Training Objective
To provide the industry with international best practices and supply chain performance indicators to support process optimisation and continuous improvement. GS1 Hong Kong organises a 2-day Supply Chain Maturity Training Workshop. Supply Chain Maturity Model (SCMM) is designed for companies to achieve step-by-step process optimisation. It aims to help companies effectively assess their readiness in adopting SCM best practices and carefully guides them through the enhancement process enabling them to move up the SCM ladder.

Key Takeaways
In the course, participants will:
- receive a structured framework and implementation guideline for process definition and maturity laddering;
- know how to measure a supply chain for continuous improvement and also learn good practices;
- acquire key steps and technologies in conducting a process improvement project; and
- take away a maturity model to help evaluate their companies’ supply chain performance.

Who Should Attend?
Suitable for senior executives and managers who are responsible for supply chain operations
